circular on virtual currencies, but that has not happened yet. In the meantime, several companies have launched Bitcoin (BTC) offerings in India. Last week, private and public sector banks are planning to meet to discuss regulations that would give them permission to allow cryptofunding to expand beyond crypto-to-fiat channels. Meanwhile, the dispute between the Reserve Bank of India and Bitcoin companies continues to complicate the regulatory landscape. Banks Move Against Cryptos News came out of India that there are at least three meetings set to be held by January this year to discuss cryptofunding.

The upcoming Bitcoin industry body, Bitcoin and Cryptocurrency Committee (BCC), discussed this matter at its latest meeting, in New Delhi, on December 2. The BCC is expected to tackle the regulatory situation around crypto and crowdfunding. According to one of the meetings to be held before January 14, some bankers are looking to ban the use of Bitcoin for crowdfunding. The cryptocurrency community has been by and large for digital-only fundraising models that allow for more anonymity and regulation-free transactions. The issue is that banks see bad publicity associated with Bitcoin and cryptocurrency transactions. That is why they would prefer to ban Bitcoin from being used for crowdfunding. As per CNBC, in recent times, several banks from the US and UK have
