Support and more.This invention relates to an optical fiber connector for connecting a plurality of optical fibers. More particularly, the invention relates to an optical fiber connector which includes a plurality of optical fiber holders for receiving and holding a plurality of optical fibers. Optical fiber connectors are used for connecting one optical fiber to another. The connectors generally include a precision ferrule to align and receive the end portions of two optical fibers to be joined. The present invention provides an optical fiber connector with a plurality of precision ferrule holders for receiving and holding a plurality of optical fibers. At least two of the precision ferrule holders are mounted on a support member. Advantageously, the precision ferrule holder design of the present invention facilitates the insertion of an optical fiber end portion into the precision ferrule holder while the precision ferrule holder is mounted on the support member. In a preferred embodiment, the precision ferrule holder design of the present invention eliminates the need for threading the optical fiber end portions in the holders. The precision ferrule holder design of the present invention generally includes a slotted inner housing, a mandrel, a precision ferrule with a ferrule slit formed in it, and a slotted outer housing. The outer housing has outer slots formed therein for receiving the slotted inner housing. The inner housing is retained in the outer housing by a friction fit. The inner housing defines a plurality of fiber receiving slots. The ferrule slit is positioned at the front of the ferrule and extends longitudinally from the front of the ferrule over the backside of the ferrule. The precision ferrule is positioned within the ferrule 3e33713323
